"Free World One will launch us into the next stage of our species' evolution" says founder Colin Turner

April 3, 2018 – Irish author, activist and founder of The Free World Charter, Colin Turner has launched a new business, Free World One, that he claims will propel us into the next stage of our species' evolution.

Fuelled by the belief that free access to basic living requirements is now a fundamental human right of all twenty-first century citizens, Free World One's mission is to create, support and fund a wide variety of projects that promote their ethos of creating a free and sustainable planet for all.

Founder Colin Turner explains:

"It's time for us to realise that humanity's struggle for survival is basically over. We can provide for everyone now sustainably and with minimal effort if we just organise ourselves specifically for that purpose. We are still behaving as though life is a dog-eat-dog fight for resources, when our level of technology has made it easier than ever to produce the things we need to survive. It appears as though we are just blindly continuing the same millennia-old habits without questioning their usefulness.

"Free World One is dedicated to shining a light on and supporting projects that help us move away from these habits and re-learn how easy it can be for everyone to enjoy a richer, more sustainable life beyond this antiquated competition, just by working together a little."

Projects include the free-sharing global community site Freeworlde.com, and the open awards and reputation network HonorPay.org, with other projects in development including PlayUp Games, an education syllabus that teaches cooperation and life skills through the medium of games, and a feature length film adaptation of popular novel F-Day: The Second Dawn of Man.

Funds derived from these projects pay the company's minimal operational costs and are invested into new projects, with profits distributed to shareholders.

Free World One is in the process of raising capital by selling shares in the company, giving supporters the opportunity to help drive change while also allowing them to benefit financially. The funding drive is already over 25% complete with 183 investors securing shares at a price of just 99c each.

The irony of a for-profit company whose aim is to free the world from a profit system has not been lost on the founder:

“We are not dreamers. We are realists. The kind of world where we can support everyone through cooperation and technology is not quite ready yet. Spreading ideas like this in an environment still immersed in the noise of consumerism is a near impossible task.

“However, there is quite a considerable intersection of ideas that can advance our aims that also have potential within a for-profit model. This is where we are principally aiming the activities for Free World One - to be an efficient, ethical company that can sustain itself while still promoting the ‘good stuff’ that will hopefully one day exit us from the grip of consumer culture entirely.”

The launch of Free World One comes just days before Colin's appearance as guest speaker at the 10th annual Zeitgeist Day (Z-Day) in Frankfurt, Germany on April 7, where he hopes to raise awareness of his latest venture and encourage support.
